Inside the DHEC bureaucracy

First in a series

by John Norton

"The wheels of the gods grind slow, I'm telling you," Dr. Donald Robinson was telling me a couple of weeks ago as we sat in his plush office (deep-pile carpet, couch, coffee table) somewhere in the bowels of the DHEC office complex. "The laws delay," as Shakespeare says. It was just a matter of not getting there, that's all." We were discussing the polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) problem up at Pickens County's Sangamo Electric Company, where workers have been exposed to PCB for almost 20 years. Over the past five years, evidence has been accumulating which indicates the insulating fluid is a cancer-inducing agent. Public attention was drawn to the PCB dilemma back in August when health officials announced that the upper S. C. arm of Lake Hartwell had been heavily contaminated by discharges from the Sangamo plant and warned that fish taken in that area should not be consumed.

Robinson is chief of the Department of Health and Environmental Control's Bureau of Occupational Health, the state agency charged with enforcing occupational health laws designed to insure a healthy worker environment in the state's industrial facilities. I was attempting to trace the bureau's involvement in employee health monitoring at Sangamo and at another plant which uses the toxic substance—the McGraw-Edison Power Systems Division in Greenwood. Recent furor surrounding PCB usage and contamination has centered on Sangamo's plant; the only media attention given to the Greenwood facility came in October when McGraw-Edison announced that it was phasing out the use of PCB in its electrical capacitors in favor of a new substance, alkylated chlorodiphenyl oxide. My interest in McGraw-Edison was aroused when I discovered inadvertently that DHEC had conducted a medical survey of McGraw-Edison's PCB-exposed workers last February. Why, I wondered, had this study not been mentioned in the press? I contacted one reporter who told me he had heard about the study but had been told it was done at the request of the company and would have to be released through McGraw-Edison management. But conversations with a company representative led me to believe that DHEC had initiated the study. This fact seemed inconsistent with DHEC's statements this fall that an epidemiological survey of Sangamo workers would be the first of its kind in the state. Why had the McGraw-Edison study been initiated, what were its results, and why hadn't Sangamo—which has been in

"...Robinson's attitude toward the industries he regulates is consistent with his long service as a corporate medical director, as well as the long established attitude in state government as a whole..."

The Senate takes a dive

By Jim Walser

Arnold Goodstein is a punk.

Or at least that's the unmistakable impression that he gives, jiving ass around the floor of the state Senate like he did at Monday's special session of the legislature. He'll sit back and prop his feet up on his expensive desk, stationed there in the hallowed halls of this great deliberative body, lighting up a big cigar, smiling, bellowing a laugh now and then, conversing obnoxiously, loudly as the issues at hand are discussed above the din caused by his noise and that caused by a score of individuals just like him.

Goodstein, at one time, had the reputation of being a "reformer", whatever that word means when employed in reference to anyone under the roof of the South Carolina Statehouse. As one of the youngest members ever elected to the House of Representatives and now the Senate, Goodstein won that "reformer" label almost by default. Almost anyone who is under 40 years of age is considered a young, idealistic "progressive" who will be at odds with the pre-historic leadership and procedures of the legislature.

But that, as we shall soon see, is the kind of overstated, simplistic examination of the Statehouse that can no longer be considered operable. The House is predominantly a body constituted of younger people these days, and neither is the "generation gap" the problem in the Senate, as Monday's butchered challenge to the Senate's medieval seniority system proved beyond a doubt. The problem has nothing to do with age or party. The problem is that when it comes down to a question of the public's interest or the personal interests of those involved in running the Senate, the public interest always plays a weak second fiddle. Those who thought the upcoming session might be different, because of the results of the last two general elections, had those impossible dreams quickly foreclosed on Monday. And no one illustrates the selfishness and ignorance endemic to the state Senate better than Arnold Goodstein.

A successful Charleston lawyer, Goodstein has the money, the trendy clothes, the looks and the charm that are the necessary characteristics of his profession. When he arrived in the state legislature, Goodstein blasted the seniority system for its obviously undemocratic nature, but by the time he was 32, and elected to fill Gov. Jim Edwards' vacant Senate seat in 1974, Goodstein was perfectly aware that he was joining the most exclusive men's lodge in South Carolina. He professed "awe" at the men who have led

Busy beavers at the Corps

As many of you know, our friends the busy beavers, a.k.a. the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, are in the dam-and-lake business in South Carolina. Try as they might, the folks at Savannah District headquarters in Savannah can't keep out of the news. In the past month, they've become involved in law suits aimed at halting construction of that quarter - of - a - billion dollar boondoggle formerly known as Trotters Shoals, now memorialized as the Richard B. Russell Dam and Lake. The military beavers were embroiled in another controversy earlier this fall — property owners and other area residents around the Corps - managed Lake Hartwell shoreline were up in arms over a Corps lakeshore management plan; the citizens banded together and produced enough political clout to convince area Congressman Butler Derrick (D-SC) that action was needed, post haste. Derrick contacted fellow 5th District Congressman Ken Holland and the lakeside city of Anderson experienced its first congressional hearing when a subcommittee of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, of which Holland is a member, met there Sept. 10. Testimony at the two-day hearing revealed greed on the part of many lakeshore land owners and a good deal of arrogance on the part of the Corps in its dealings with the public; i.e., nothing new.

Lake Hartwell, you may recall, has a small pollution problem. Polychlorinated biphenyl discharges from the Sangamo Electric Company plant in Pickens County over the past twenty years have contaminated the upper Hartwell lake bottom to such an extent that the Environmental Protection Agency and the S. C. Department of Health and Environmental Control announced jointly in August that fish taken from the lake's waters should not be eaten. The ban on fish consumption was partially lifted recently but remains in effect for most of the South Carolina portion of the lake.

The Corps' public stance amidst the PCB publicity has been stooped. The army engineers are in the lake management business and managing a poisoned lake is a little like watching submarine races — without a date. Virginia Kauble, public relations director at the Corps' Savannah District office, told Osceola recently that the Corps is in a "cooperative situation" with the EPA and has considered doing its own PCB monitoring "but we haven't been able to get an Army research team in here to do it yet." Meanwhile, for Ms. Kauble, who has issued the Corps' weekly Clark Hill and Lake Hartwell fishing reports for fourteen years, it's business as usual. "I mentioned the PCB situation twice in my news releases a couple of months ago, but I haven't been keeping up with it lately," the p.r. director told us. "You don't hear much about it any more. All I know is what I read in the papers."

The Corps' fishing reports relate the week's biggest catches around Clark Hill and Hartwell, offering tips on where to fish and which baits are landing the big ones. Ms. Kauble doesn't agree that the fish-news releases are promotional devices which encourage fishermen to hurry on out and drop a hook, but how else would you describe this sparkling copy? "Largemouth bass are hitting nite crawlers and spring lizards at Hartwell Lake. White bass are making noises...(and) fat and sassy crappie weighing a pound or more being taken on minnows. Hybrid bass are schooling and are plentiful and even an occasional walleye shows up on a stringer." That's from the November 9 release. Nowhere in the three-page wrap-up is there any mention of the EPA fishing warning still in effect over half of the lake. Nor has there been any mention of the ban in a half-dozen other releases issued since the warning. "I went to some county fairs this fall," she told us, "and people weren't bothered about it in general. They were going to fish anyway." Kauble said the reports she was receiving on big catches "are not from areas under the warning," but several of the catches reported in the November 9 bulletin were made in the contaminated South Carolina arm.

The Corps' public relations director admitted that shortly after the original warning was issued in August, fishing on Lake Hartwell came to a standstill. "It wiped out fishing for a little bit," she said, "but it's coming back now." We gathered from her conversation increased fishing activity was the Corps' main concern. But then, they're not in the public health business, after all. "All we're saying," she added at the end of our conversation, "is that the fish are biting."

Southern fried

Well, is he or isn't he? Is Jim Anders, the fifth circuit solicitor and current aspirant to the U. S. Attorney's job under newly-elected President Jimmy Carter, in favor of capital punishment or against it?

In a letter to Attorney General Dan McLeod last month Anders strongly recommended that the death penalty be reinstated in South Carolina. That's not surprising, considering the fact that Anders emerged from the closet on the death penalty issue shortly after being sworn in as solicitor in January of 1975. "I've always stated and always believed the death penalty was something we need, to be used in moderation," Anders told The State on Dec. 4 in his most recent affirmation of that position.

Anders' stand on the death penalty has come as a bit of a surprise to members of his opposition, most notably local black attorney Hemphill Pride, as well as some Anders supporters who felt after the '74 campaign that Anders might oppose capital punishment.

Possibly the reason for the confusion among some of those who supported Anders in his '74 challenge to incumbent John Foard was the fact that pro-Anders forces spent a good deal of primary day in '74 circulating hand-scrawled posters reading, "A Vote For John Foard Is A Vote for Capital Punishment" around Columbia. The posters were primarily circulated in predominantly black wards, where capital punishment was considered a volatile issue because of the racist manner in which it has been applied in the U. S. over the past 100 years, a pattern which led the Supreme Court to strike down all state laws a few years ago. The posters so incensed Foard that he appeared in Ward 7 and personally tore down the sign, in full view of television cameras.

Now Anders says that he too was and remains a supporter of capital punishment, and that the signs linking Foard to the emotional issue were not circulated with his knowledge or approval. What's more, as one of Anders' junior associates explained this week, "if you had seen some of the crimes that we've seen in the last two years you might understand why he's for capital punishment."

Maybe, but that's not the question. The question, as raised by his arch enemy Pride and others is, did Anders and his co-workers like Tom Broadwater mislead the voters on election day back in '74? And the answer is apparently affirmative.

Anders is still a strong contender for the U. S. district attorney job, and will likely remain so. And at least those who will select him will know that a vote for Jim Anders is, for sure, a vote for capital punishment.

Labor outlook

Newly-elected president of the South Carolina Labor Council, Jim Adler, added his comments to the current flurry of public dialogue over the coming 1978 gubernatorial election in a recent interview with Osceola. While the most recent media speculation has concerned the interesting possibility of a Pug Ravenel - Dick Riley face-off in the Democratic primary, Adler was decrying the possibility (if not likelihood) of a Ravenel - Brantley Harvey showdown.

When asked about a Ravenel-Harvey race, Adler responded, "That's going to create a real problem (for Labor) -- no question about it. Both of them are very close friends of ours. I hope we aren't confronted with that kind of situation. I can see other areas where I would much rather see one or the other be involved -- rather than confronting each other."

Presumably Adler was thinking about Ravenel or Harvey making the race against incumbent GOP U. S. Senator Strom Thurmond, who will be up for re-election in '78. Thurmond has been giving Labor a hard time for a long time -- but no harder than Adler has been receiving from long-time Labor Council chief Sinway Young, whom Adler ousted at the Council's convention in September. The election was a long-awaited victory for reformers in the state labor movement, and climaxed a sometimes bitter fight.

After his defeat, Young made a public unity pledge. Some of his actions since then might cause one to question his sincerity, though. One of Young's surprises for Adler was a notice to vacate the Labor Council's office space on Sumter Street in Columbia -- which the Council had been renting from Young's IBEW local next door during Young's regime. The notice was received by Adler a few days before the November general election. So in the midst of hectic last-minute preparations for the election, the Council had to "pick up and move" their entire headquarters to new offices across town.

Adler took it all calmly enough. "After 21 years (as Council president), understandably it's a hard transition for the man (Young) to make. You know, I understand his position."

that sacrosanct body over the decades, and then earlier this year, when one of the Senate's most powerful and reactionary members was in trouble politically, Goodstein went out on the stump with his "friend", Jim Stevens.

But his support of the Horry County political boss was mild stuff indeed compared to the speech Goodstein unloaded Monday in favor of the seniority system. He rose to object to a "modest proposal" submitted by freshman Alex Sanders of Columbia, that would "reform" the Senate system of selecting committees so that each Senator would choose his first two selections in order of seniority instead of his first five, a system that keeps young members off the Senate's meaningful committees and denies these district's people meaningful representation.

A couple of years ago Goodstein would not only have favored Sanders' proposal, but probably would have wanted something stronger. "But now I'm like a kid in a candy store, I can have anything I wanted," guffawed Goodstein in a laugh that sounded like a mule, hee-hawing away. "Alex, there was a great deal of evil in this system or at least I thought there was when I got here. But it's amazing how much fairer the system has gotten in two years. I'm gonna get to choose anything I want to!"

Well that's nice for Arnie, the little rich kid who moved from 46th (last) to 2nd on the list of seniority after November's elections. Unfortunately, Goodstein couldn't leave bad enough alone. He went further.

"What you'll find out after being here awhile," intoned Goodstein in his address aimed at freshmen, "is that the real important work isn't done in Senate committees anyway. It's done in conference committees. Most of the work done by the committees ends up going down the drain because the conference committee has to do something different."

Then, why were the senior members and the nouveau riche like Goodstein so appalled that freshmen want to be on worthwhile committees now, if that's not where the prestigious work is being done? And why have Messrs. Gressette and Dennis fought change inch by inch over the last dozen or so years?

Goodstein had more revelations about the inner workings of the Senate. "I'll tell you when I got on a conference committee with Jim Stevens and Dick Riley, and they were tied up with other things, I got to work on one of my pet projects which is judicial reform. I got to do a lot of the work because the other guys were busy with other things. I'd always gone to the movies in the afternoon before then." It's a hell of a way to run a democracy, where the senior members are too "busy" to work on such meaningless things as judicial reform -- probably the most important piece of legislation considered in the legislature in recent years -- and the work is farmed out to whoever happens to be standing around. Or not at the movie matinee.

But that's alright with Goodstein now. Everything's hunky dory. "I feel like the fellow who's been going without food for a long time and now he's just got something to eat, and his friends come running up to him and say we've got to have a hunger strike," said Goodstein with another hee-haw. "I apologize, but that's the way I feel."

Punk is the word.

Needless to say by now, Sanders' modest proposal was tabled and therefore lost, 26-18. All 14 freshmen voted against tabling it, and were joined by Isadore Lourie of Columbia, Harris Smith of Pickens, Bill Doar of Georgetown and Dewey Wise of Charleston. An earlier proposal by freshman Heyward McDonald of Columbia was defeated even worse, 30-16.

Seniority has been very much in the news of late, and therefore it was considered a vulnerable area to reform efforts this session. Two years ago, one of Pug

Ravenel's more recurring themes involved ending the seniority stronghold on the Senate, and polls taken by candidates this year showed as much as 80 percent of the state's voters in favor of a new system. No other Southern state allows seniority to so dominate its legislative process.

Moreover, many state Senators who emphasized their seniority and their love for that system were defeated in primary and general elections this year. And Horry County voters were treated to the sorry spectacle of Stevens, aided by Goodstein, totally reversing his defense of seniority in the final days of his losing campaign.

But this week's gathering was strategically neither the time nor the place to broach the subject. It was, of course, an organizational meeting, and in the rush of things, the freshmen and sophomore sympathizers may have already met there Waterloo--in this case even before the 1977 session has officially begun.

Gressette, the wily Senate Pro Tem, took advantage of the disorganized state of his opposition and teamed with his aides like John Drummond of Greenwood and John Lindsay of Marlboro to successfully "fuzz things up," getting so many parliamentary maneuvers going at once that everyone was confused.

At one point things got so bad that Lt. Governor Brantley Harvey, who presided over the session, admitted, "Honestly the rule (one of the Senate rules under debate) is so obfuscated that I don't really know how to read it."

Events were so confusing to freshman David Turnipseed of Spartanburg that at one point, after a set of rules had been adopted earlier, Turnipseed was still unaware of it. When Lindsay and others gleefully pointed out to him that the rules were adopted on an earlier resolution by Sen. John Martin, Turnipseed confessed shyly, "I must have missed something somewhere."

It probably won't be the first time that Turnipseed or his freshmen cohorts will be outflanked by the old guys, especially in view of the changing colors of "allies" like Goodstein and the lack of coordination among those wanting change.

After the morning debacle had, thankfully, been interrupted by lunch, Heyward McDonald emerged from behind the TV klieg lights to holler down to Lourie, headed downstairs: "Are we going to try and have a meeting during lunch to get something together," asked McDonald, looking a bit exhausted from his earlier efforts. "I don't know," replied Lourie, a quasi-leader of the much-publicized Young Turks. "Are we?"

The assassin...

The Making Of An Assassin by George McMillan is a sensitive, absorbing story about how a poor, white child with above average intelligence grew up in the middle of America and became a killer. More specifically, it is a story of how James Earl Ray became the assassin of Martin Luther King. But the portrait of Ray as a lone assassin is only a part of the story, the climax to the story of this man's life. Below the surface, solidly implanted in this book, is an indictment of American society, an indictment of all of us "respectable Americans" who live on the right side of the tracks.

The story does not begin with James Earl Ray, an assassin we can look at coldly, bitterly, and hate. It begins with Speedy and Ceal Ray whose love produces a baby, Jimmy. With compassion, the book follows Jimmy Ray through a barren childhood, a snobbish school system and a racist society; it shows Ray's experience with an economic system that laid him off his first job, an army life to which he could not conform, and a prison environment that forced him to conform and gave him no alternatives.

After Ray escapes from a Missouri prison in April of 1967, the book zooms in like a telephoto lens and follows Ray closely, watching every move, exploring his motives, until a year later Dr. King is murdered in Memphis, Tennessee. McMillan shows clearly, by looking at the life of the man, not by thwarting the myriad of conspiracy theories, that Jimmy Ray was the assassin of Dr. King and that he acted alone. The evidence is persuasive.

Yet we continue to hear cries of conspiracy. Those who believe in conspiracy, who believe that people at the "highest level" may have been involved, may have protected themselves or others by tampering with the evidence, probably cannot be convinced otherwise by any kind of evidence.

Perhaps one reason for crying "conspiracy" when our leaders are killed is that we can't bear it when the great among us are murdered by the nobodies. We are eager to believe that there must be more important people involved, highly placed people, and wealthy. Dr. Martin Luther King, President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, winner of the Noble Peace Prize, organizer of the Poor Peoples March on Washington, can't have been killed just by Jimmy Ray ... And yet ... that the murderer is Ray is a great irony.

This book shows that Ray was frustrated, angry at something he could not define, bound by the circumstances of his life. If Ray had been black, he might have been venting his sense of frustration and anger by marching with Dr. King. But he was white and his anger and frustration, twisted by racist thinking into hatred, found Dr. King as target. It is indeed irony that Martin Luther King, who understood anger, frustration and bondage, who preached nonviolence and poor peoples marches as a way to bring freedom, was violently killed — and killed by Jimmy Ray. In a sense, the fact that Ray, poor white nobody, murdered Dr. King proves, even more poignantly than if the murderer had been a conspiracy of the powerful and wealthy, that the things Dr. King was saying and struggling for are true and that we must take a look at them again.

Yet we continue to be surprised and bewildered because our leaders are assassinated. We cry conspiracy, foreign agents, political in-fighting, organized crime — it's much easier to cry conspiracy than to face the realities bared with such perception in the concise, moving pages of The Making Of An Assassin.

Inside the DHEC

An explanation

In 1973 an act of the General Assembly created the S. C. Department of Health and Environmental Control through the consolidation of the Board of Health and the Pollution Control Authority. The agency is the "sole advisor to the State in matters pertaining to the public health and has the authority to abate, control and prevent pollution." The manpower necessary to carry out these twin mandates is staggering; the agency employs nearly 400 persons at its state and regional offices, making it one of the largest if not the largest agency within state government. DHEC's central offices are located in a massive office complex at 2600 Bull Street in Columbia; the complex includes the R. J. Aycock Building and the J. Marion Sims Building and houses more than 80 bureaus and divisions and nearly 400 administrative personnel. The complex is honeycombed with narrow hallways packed with tiny offices where middle management and support personnel carry out their daily activities. In contrast to the hive-like atmosphere in these quarters, the offices of the powerful—the bureau chiefs and top-flight administrators—are expansive and plush; the office of the Commissioner, for example, would rival that of any of a number of the nation's most successful corporate executives.

Almost four years after the melding of the health and environmental protection agencies, the transition remains incomplete. The Commissioner, Dr. Kenneth J. Aycock, was formerly head of the board of health, and employees of the environmental control section of the agency are quick to say-off-the-record that their division remains the agency's bastard child. A 1975 study of the agency's environmental control division by the S. C. Public Interest Research Group found a significant overlapping of responsibilities within the agency and went so far as to recommend that the agency once again be divided into two independent bodies, one with responsibility for health and the other for environmental control.

Accountability is often difficult to determine in an agency where responsibility is shared among so many bureaus and divisions—the bureaucratic buck-passing is quite often monumental. It is difficult, therefore, for members of the news media to maintain over a lengthy period of time the kind of sustained effort needed to write in-depth stories which examine the agency's activities and its success in carrying out its legislated responsibilities. Over the next several months, Osceola will feature a number of stories dealing with various aspects of the agency and will attempt to pull back the bureaucratic curtain far enough to look intensely into at least some of its activities.

The first story in this series—a two-parter—deals with the agency's Bureau of Occupational Health which is charged under South Carolina's occupational safety and health plan with the responsibility of protecting the health of 900,000 employees in the state's 48,000 industrial facilities.

business 20 years compared to McGraw-Edison's four—been surveyed at the same time? I was told by DHEC's communications director that Robinson would have the answers.

The job as chief of DHEC's occupational health bureau is the most recent stage in Robinson's 30-year career in the occupational health field, a career which has included stints as an occupational health physician in Panama and as assistant corporate medical director for Standard Oil of California. Robinson is a likeable, easy-going, outspoken man of 55 or so whose penchant for anecdotal conversation and quotations from the classics suggests both the writer and the student of literature. And he is both; he has written a self-published novel on a biblical theme and is the author of a syndicated column, "Robinson on Parallel", which is published in weekly newspapers in this state and elsewhere.

Robinson came to DHEC in 1968, prior to the establishment of mandatory state and federal programs which grew out of the passage of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA) of 1970. OSHA included provisions for the establishment of state-operated health and safety programs, provided they were "at least as effective" as the program established on the federal level. South Carolina's OSHA enforcement plan was provisionally accepted by federal authorities in 1972; the S. C. Department of Labor would administrate the entire program, but the day-to-day activities of the occupational health division would be conducted by Robinson's Bureau of Occupational Health at DHEC, under an agreement with the labor department. Today, South Carolina is one of only 24 states which has opted to forego direct federal enforcement and administrate OSHA on its own. The South Carolina OSHA plan recently became the first to receive final approval from Washington, and federal officials have reportedly suggested that other states use the S. C. plan as a model. "We modestly say," Robinson said, "that we've got the best occupational health program in any state east of the Mississippi and maybe even in the United States. Many a state has started its own program and then turned it back to the federal government," he said. "It costs the state to have its own program, whereas the federal government will do it for nothing. We get 50 percent matching funds from the federal government; the states that don't have their own program don't spend anything." He added rather sardonically, "South Carolina as you know is a states rights state, one of the last strongholds. We're a backwards state that believes in doing things for itself. That's the way we are and I hope we stay that way."

Robinson's attitude toward the industries he regulates is consistent with his long service as a corporate medical director, as well as the long-established attitude of state government as a whole toward industry, wherein the state, in its enthusiastic rush to attract new companies within its borders, operates under the assumption that the state which wants industry most governs it least. "I'm not an environmentalist in the strictest sense of the word," he said. "I'm realist enough to know that if you're going to make a living, you're going to have to sacrifice some things. There's a balance between killing yourself and starving to death. In this bureau we take that (attitude). We take that course with industry. We're out there to promote the health of the employee, not to put people out of business. And we try to work out equitable arrangements where they correct these defects rather than have to go out of business. The federal government would like for us to be out there mauling people over the head, but I think we have a good program without doing that."

No one argues that a balance between "killing yourself and starving to death" must be maintained. The question is, how well does the state maintain that balance? During our conversation, Robinson painted a rosy picture of the state's occupational health program, claiming for example that South Carolina was 50 percent more efficient than the federal government in carrying out occupational health inspections in industrial facilities. But responsible critics outside of the state bureaucracy indicate that while it may be true that South Carolina is ahead of the federal government in compliance inspections, the occupational health staff is still woefully undermanned. Dr. Winona Vernberg, director of the University of South Carolina's graduate programs in public health, says the shortage of enforcement personnel "is sort of staggering. There are approximately 48,000 industrial firms employing a non-labor force of one million persons in South Carolina," she said as we talked in her office several weeks ago. "And to oversee the health of this large labor force, DHEC employs a total of six industrial hygienists. (It) is ridiculous to expect a staff of this size to oversee the health of one million workers. But that's what the state has at the present time."

Robinson, as might be expected, attributes the shortage of personnel to budgetary problems. "We just don't have the funding to do everything we'd like to do," he said. He produced figures indicating that each year the six industrial hygienists visit about 500 facilities employing about seven percent of the state's total non-farm work force. If firms around the state were monitored on a rotating basis, at this rate each

"...In the absence of state funds to monitor even the most hazardous industries, encouraging 'responsible management' is a key DHEC tactic..."

firm would be visited once every 96 years. But Robinson says that's not the way the program works. "We try to pick out the trouble spots. What would be the use of going to a real estate office if you hadn't been to the chemical plant down the street?" Robinson said his bureau attempts to identify particularly hazardous industries for more frequent inspections. During the fiscal year 1975, for example, the occupational health division identified 48 establishments employing 8800 workers for "target health hazard inspections." Four hundred and fifteen other establishments were included in a general inspection schedule. Over 50

NOTICE OF ADJUSTMENT IN RETAIL ELECTRIC RATES AND CHARGES

Notice is hereby given that the South Carolina Electric & Gas Company will adjust its rates and charges for retail electric service effective with service rendered on and after December 13, 1976, so as to increase its base rates 10.66 per cent and its total revenue 9.84 per cent. This is a portion of the 13.25 per cent increase in base rates and 12.23 per cent increase in total revenue sought by the Company in a proceeding filed with the South Carolina Public Service Commission on November 12, 1976 (Docket No. 76-645-E). This interim increase is being placed into effect subject to refund in keeping with Section 24-38, Code of Laws of South Carolina (1962).

This increase is subject to a final order by the Public Service Commission, and any revenues collected that are not finally allowed by the Commission will be refunded with interest at an annual rate of 9 per cent. Any refunds which may be required are secured by an undertaking that has been found adequate by the Public Service Commission (Order No. 19-736). This notice for the information of customers is published as required by the South Carolina Public Service Commission.

events & entertainment

CINEMA

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"French School Girls" features porno champ Tina Russell, with "Night of the Spanish Fly" as the second feature. X. From 11 a.m. ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Wet Christmas" and "Wet Fantasies." X. From 11.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 252-8011

"Car Wash" Richard Pryor, George Carlin, Professor Iwin Corey, Garrett Morris and others sing, dance and joke their way through the suds in this popular black musical that holds for another week. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9. Those two matinees are for the weekend only. COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Survive." Low cost exploitation picture about a plane crash and resultant cannibalism. Supposedly based on an actual incident, but expect more titillation than realism. Made in Mexico. R. 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, and 9:30. The matinee drops during the week.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Life Guard." Somewhat late for summer, Columbia finally gets to see this unpromising number about a beach inhabited by a dreamy guy. (Sam Elliott). PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9; only the last three shows during the week.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Two Minute Warning." Be forewarned; there's a lot of gore and a lot of inanity in this latest disaster pic about a sniper creating panic at the Superbowl. But at least the filmmakers are giving you realism; some of those extras really got trampled. With (who else) Charlton Heston, David Jansen, John Cassavetes, Gena Rowlands, and Jack Klugman. Rated R. 4:30, 7, and 9:30.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Missouri Breaks." It's hard to see how this movie about free-loving outlaws on the run from a maniacal hired killer ever got made except that it stars Marlon Brando, Jack Nicholson, and the producers looked to make a lot of money. None of these expectations amounted to much although Nicholson gives good service in a lost cause and Brando is, as always, entertaining. The film was a crass, package deal, and city slicker Arthur Penn, trying his hand at mythic Western, seems to have had little feeling for the bluff, natural lyricism of the genre. PG. 2:15, 4:30, 6:45, and 9:15; the early matinee is for the weekend only.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." Randall Patrick McMurphy and his crazy cohorts at an Oregon mental hospital aren't nearly as nuts as the vicious Nurse Ratched who oversees them. A naturalistic adaptation by Milos Forman of Ken Kesey's political cartoon (which probably wouldn't have worked as it was onscreen anyway), but the movie soars with Jack Nicholson's McMurphy and unsettles with Louise Fletcher's creepily solicitous Ratched. Oscars for both as well as Best Picture, Best Director. R. 4:20, 6:40, and 9 with an additional 2 shows on the weekend.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Across the Great Divide." Touring the wilderness with some cute kids and a comic codger. Rated G, for utter wholesomeness. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Harold and Maude." The love affair of a teenager and an 80-year-old provokes outrage from his domineering mother, nausea from his fatherly priest, Freudianisms from his psychiatrist, and adoration from legions of cult followers who have gone to this movie again and again. It's a bit too glib in its statements about the beauty of life, but hard not to like, especially given Hal Ashby's sure direction and the performances by Bud Cort and Ruth Gordon. R. 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square Downtown, 254-6731

"Carrie." An outcast among her high school classmates, Carrie (Sissy Spacek) is a strange, psychokinetic girl who's invitation to the Senior Prom by the most popular boy in school is such a triumph for her, that when the other girls use the opportunity to humiliate her, she destroys the prom and everyone in it. See review on page eight. R. 2:30, 4:45, 7, and 9:20.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 256-1950

"Marathon Man." There's no sense of fun in this rather mechanical thriller about a student (Dustin Hoffman) who is inexplicably (barely explicably in the end) pursued by a fiendish ex-Nazi (Laurence Oliver) out to save himself from diamond theft. Nice, if you like endless shock violence and classy production values. Director John Schlesinger presides at the wake; although producer Robert Evans seems to have had more than a say in the slaughter. The plot is by writer William Goldman from his novel. With William Devane, Roy Scheider, Marthe Keller. 2:15, 4:45, 7:45, and 9:45.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"The Front." A restaurant cashier (Woody Allen) becomes rich and famous when a friend who has been blacklisted by the red-baiting investigators of the McCarthy fifties, asks him to front, to put his name on, TV scripts. Some funny moments - mostly supplied by Allen - but director Martin Ritt and writer Walter Bernstein, who were themselves blacklisted during the fifties, seem to think that it's enough that we share their outrage over the situation. It isn't; still, of interest for Woody Allen fans. Zero Mostel, Andrea Marcovicci. PG. 3, 5, 7, and 9.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 254-7960

"Mandingo." Lust and miscegenation down on the old plantation in this pulpy garbage that is so blatantly offensive it's almost charming. James Mason heads the slave owning family, son Perry King does the lustin' and Susan George gets "pleasured" by Ken Norton. To be avoided. R. 2, 4:20, 6:40, and 9 - no 2 shows during the week.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Return of the Man Called Horse." After having Indians as grunting villains for so many years, Hollywood tries to do right by them in this would be naturalistic account of Indian life. The result is some gory details of a religious purification ritual and an almost holy performance by Richard Harris as the English nobleman who prefers the ways of the range, but the movie really has little more to offer than good intentions and tries to apologize for its boredom with an inept action climax. 2:45, 4:55, 7:05, and 9:15. No matinees during the week.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Gone in 60 Seconds" and "Eat My Dust." Tandem rubber-peelers that seek to keep the audience awake through crashes, chases, spills, etc. R. Call for the times. The late show at this theatre on the 10th and 11th will be "Last Tango in Paris."

MUSIC

The Columbia City Ballet will present "The Nutcracker" on December 17th, 18th and 19th at 8 p.m. with additional matinees on the 18th and 19th at 3. $5.25 seats are all that are still available as of press time.

The University of South Carolina Concert Choir will present its annual "Christmas Concert" on Sunday, Dec. 12. This year's concert will be held at Eastminister Presbyterian Church on Trenholm Road beginning at 7 p.m. The program will feature the "Midnight Mass For Christmas," by Charpentier; the "Ceremony of Carols," by Britten, and other selections of traditional and contemporary holiday music.
